General wisdom of running a business includes planning, costs, contracts, predictions, to name a few. Planning starts with an idea of what you want. An idea is the first step in a business that is made successful by the regular investment of time and effort. An idea can come from observations about what works and what doesn't. A business is a product of process, process of an idea, process of planning, execution of the plan. The process of planning is developing and writing down your business plan. Making a business plan Business owners have a plan in place for the long run. A business plan needs to be an outline of your business vision. This is not the same as a business goal statement. A goal statement can be a little ambiguous; a business vision is more clear and precise. A goal statement is written to attract new business, a vision is written to guide your business. Making a business plan lets you see your business as a whole. Your business plan is a record of everything you think about your business. Your business plan can be considered as a simple marketing tool, which lets you communicate the success of your business to others. The main sections of a business plan Your business plan will have a title, a company name, a description of your business, a projection of future success. Business name, Company name, Business description, Business plan projection A business owner should spend some time to think about a suitable name for their business. If you have several businesses under one name then some business names are more suitable than others. A business with a good sounding name can be more trusted. You will also need to have good legal protection, as if your business name is registered it can be protected with court protection. You will need to make a business name that is simple and accurate. If your business is going to be making payments to other people then you will also need to register a business name. You will need to pay for this registration but this is the way that the government protects your business. A company name will include your company name, company address, the name of the person who owns the company and the registered office. Your company name should be a good reflection of your business. For example, if your business makes clothes then
