We describe here the isolation of a human monoclonal antibody (B4) that reacts with the cell surface of a wide variety of B-lymphocytic malignancies. In all cases tested, B4 reacted with a surface molecule present on all tumor cells. The antibody defined a 38-kd surface glycoprotein, which was isolated from KG1 cells and showed a similar antigenic profile in Raji cells and other Burkitt's lymphomas, B-CLL, and some nonmalignant B-cell lymphoproliferative disorders. The purified glycoprotein was judged to be a type 1 surface immunoglobulin (sIg) on the basis of its reaction with an Fc-receptor blocking mAb and its failure to bind the F(ab')<sub>2</sub> fragments of the same mAb. Our results indicate that sIg+ cell lines and tumors may represent a subset of malignancies, all of which appear to share a unique surface molecule, and that the molecule may be related to a class of molecules involved in lymphocyte activation.Emilio Fernández de Córd
