Transcription factor-dependent lipid accumulation in atherosclerotic plaque cells. Accumulating evidence suggests that several transcription factors (TFs) may play a role in the pathogenesis of atherosclerosis. The expression of genes encoding the master TF, sterol regulatory element-binding protein (SREBP)-1c, is increased in atherosclerotic plaque cells. This study aimed to investigate the effect of nuclear factor-kappaB (NF-kappaB) inhibitor (Bay 11-7082) and SREBP-1c inhibitor (4-alpha-bromophenacyl bromide, p-BPT) on the expression and lipid deposition in aortic cells. Human coronary artery endothelial cells (HCAECs) were stimulated by a Toll-like receptor 4 ligand, lipopolysaccharide (LPS). The cells were treated with Bay 11-7082, p-BPT, or their vehicle for 24 h. After treatment, a real-time RT-PCR analysis showed that the expression levels of the TLR4, ICAM-1, and VCAM-1 mRNAs were significantly increased after LPS stimulation, and both Bay 11-7082 and p-BPT treatment attenuated the expression of these mRNAs (p Q: What is the Chinese word for "drunkenness"?
