Try: zcat kaggle_notebooks.tgz | tar xz This will extract the contents of the file (but you can use the 'x' command to extract files one by one). Q: Why was my answer edited by one user? Possible Duplicate: Reproducibility of edits I just checked out the editing history of my answer to this question. One user (I assume the same one that suggested the question) edited it 3 times, all on the same day. The edits are as follows: Removed some unnecessary information I added to make the answer comprehensive Corrected the answer, but did not add anything How are these edits legitimate? Are they correct edits? I'm inclined to think so, since I didn't make the edits. Why are they being made? A: It is more likely a glitch than anything else - there is no standard policy for how much editing is correct (in any case, 2 edits in a row can be rejected even if they are valid). Just post a comment below and the author will make the changes. A: If there is no standard policy on edits, the answer is that it's all valid. I've run into this before. I've also run into people changing a perfectly fine answer to the wrong answer, or changing something in the question which was not asking

Oral health condition of a population of primary school pupils with high caries risk. The aim of this study is to describe oral health conditions of primary school pupils with high caries risk, and to compare them with those of pupils with low or moderate caries risk. In a rural district in the North-West of France, 523 schoolchildren aged 6 to 12 years (median 8.5 years, 42% boys) participated in a cross-sectional study in 2006. Sixty-seven per cent of the children had at least one decayed or filled primary tooth. Results revealed a higher prevalence of caries among children who received preschool preventive programmes in addition to those receiving regular school meals. The prevalence was higher in primary dentition than in mixed dentition. After adjusting for other risk factors, the risk of being caries-free was higher for children whose parents were born in Europe, from moderately affluent families, and whose parents reported they were regular, if not daily, users of water containing fluoride. The prevalence of caries was lower for 3ef4e8ef8d
