There are no reports on the qualitative and quantitative properties of myosin heavy chain (MHC) in aging human hearts. The authors assessed expression of cardiac MHC isoforms by immunohistochemistry and quantitative analysis of immunoblots in human hearts from 2 groups of patients—those aged 20-40 (younger) and those aged 70-85 (older). Myosin isoforms were separated electrophoretically and stained with Coomassie blue. The Coomassie staining was compared with the patterns obtained by Western blotting of the myosin isoforms. Left ventricular myosin light chain 1 and 2, and MHC were detected in the myosin electrophoretic patterns and myosin immunoblot. Myosin light chain 1 and MHC were more intense in the younger group, while myosin light chain 2 was less intense in the older group. Myosin heavy chain was undetectable by Coomassie staining and immunoblotting in the younger group, but was seen in the older group. The authors conclude that there are qualitative changes in MHC expression in aging human hearts. As of this writing, there are no signs that a recession is coming, but if one does materialize in 2019 or 2020, we will see considerable stress tests in the financial system, as central banks implement the necessary measures to prevent or at least minimize their impact. On the other hand, some evidence suggests that the economy is beginning to enter into a new phase of sustained growth. The results of the 2019 National Association for Business Economics (NABE) survey of 1,512 executives show a positive mood that contrasts starkly with the period from the Great Recession through the financial crisis of 2008-09. The NABE survey is based on the work of 638 chief financial officers and chief operating officers in the United States. Respondents were asked to evaluate each of the 20 different industries listed in the report. In the NABE survey, the phrase “uneven economic growth” 2d92ce491b
