The cost of the most basic essentials, such as food, accommodation, transport and energy, far outstrip the income of many. However, their cost cannot be blamed upon supply and demand. Rather, they are caused by the dysfunctional housing and welfare systems that create this inequality in the first place. As a result, the cost of living for the majority has increased. This is not surprising in the face of the rise in the cost of land, which is rising faster than incomes. It is a result of the fact that land prices have been artificially deflated by the state and the banks through the use of negative gearing on rental properties and the creation of negative gearing opportunities for the banks and investors on homes with mortgages. Because of this, rents have plummeted and are now far below the cost of the essentials of life. So the fact that tenants, or households reliant on social security, pay higher than market rent (assuming no subsidies) should not be considered surprising. Because of this, it is better to blame the high cost of housing, not the costs of the necessities of life. This is because the price of the essentials is determined by the market, and market forces determine the prices of housing, because that is where wealth is created. Housing is the end result of the process of saving and investing. Housing price inflation is therefore best seen as a positive measure of wealth creation, not a negative one. There are three basic ways in which the wealth creation process the doctor's kit The Black Betty song “The Doctor's Kit” is a number-one hit record in the U.S. in 1975. The song tells the story of a housewife who cannot afford to provide a good doctor's kit for her family's needs, so she asks a doctor for help. Chart performance The Doctor's Kit was a number-one song for four weeks in 1975, staying at the top spot for four non-consecutive weeks. The song stayed on the Hot 100 for a total of 21 weeks. The song reached number-one on the Billboard Easy Listening chart for two weeks. The song's title is a reference to the popular brand of the time, the doctor's kit, which consisted of a sample of twelve different ointments, syringes, thermometers, and bandages. In popular culture The Doctor's Kit was performed by Bob Segar and Bob Montana on the 1974 TV special Popeye the Sailor. Music video The song's music video, directed by Daniel Duran, was filmed in San Francisco in 1974. The music video was released in 1975.
