A: If anybody is interested in the solution i found - based on OPs issue is to just not have the original character encodings eg latin I and binary, and then it all works out as expected. This was tested on Snow Leopard. Character encoding OSX and OPs case was that OSX only had latin I etc, he was using a copy of the encoding he had in his PC. Shorter than that, i solved his encoding problem by running the dataset off a USB stick, and forcing OSX to use UTF-16 Little Endian encoding, and the rest i could read from there. For this, i made a file called /System/Library/Frameworks/CoreServices.framework/Frameworks/CarbonCore.framework/Versions/A/Resources/English.lproj/com.apple.iTunes.plist This file looks in the following key for the Character encoding of the drive. en_US_ascii You can copy this as many times as you want, as in your case, you only need a single line with a different character encoding such as: UTF-16LE This at least works for me, however the workaround of changing the encoding in the shell is not feasible for a multi-platform application. Run the script anyway I would however suggest the following "solution" If you store the dataset in a fixed file, you can at least define the encoding for the script. In addition, as was mentioned by @Joe in a comment, -u (UCS-2, see also here, -u for universal) is a very simple way ba244e880a
