Blue, red, and indigo ganglion cell distribution in the chick retina: a quantitative analysis. Blue, red, and indigo ganglion cells in the chick retina were identified by horseradish peroxidase histochemistry. Their distribution was determined in order to provide a quantitative comparison with a previous study of rod and cone distribution. The blue ganglion cells occupied 0.15 percent of the area of the retina, making them the thirteenth largest class of cells in the retina. Their distribution was located more uniformly than the rod cells and cones in the foveal center. The area of ba244e880a
