Aortic valve replacement in patients with dysfunctional prosthetic aortic valves. Dysfunction of the prosthetic aortic valve can occur either during the postoperative period or at subsequent follow-up. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the diagnostic and therapeutic strategy used in patients with dysfunctional prosthetic aortic valves. Between January 1992 and July 1998, 603 patients underwent isolated aortic valve replacement, of which 110 (18%) required reoperation (77 redo and 33 revalve). Twenty-five patients (11%) underwent reoperation for residual aortic regurgitation. Mean age at reoperation was 65.4 years, and 27% were female. Univariate and multivariate analyses were performed to determine risk factors for mortality and valve-related morbidity. At reoperation, aortic regurgitation was moderate in 12 (48%), severe in 9 (36%), and complete in 4 patients (16%). Partial disruption of the sewing ring was diagnosed in 5 patients (20%) and moderate aortic regurgitation in 14 (56%). Causes of reoperation were perivalvular leak in 10 patients (40%), severe aortic regurgitation in 11 (44%), and other causes in 4 (16%). A multivariate analysis identified aortic regurgitation at reoperation as a significant factor for mortality (odds ratio, 11.1; 95% confidence interval [CI], 3.2 to 39.6) and valve-related morbidity. Risk factors for mortality and valve-related morbidity included severe aortic regurgitation (odds ratio, 3.5; 95% CI, 1.1 to 11.8) and age greater than 65 years (odds ratio, 3.0; 95% CI, 1.3 to 6.7). Reoperation for residual aortic regurgitation can be safely performed during a period of 1 year after initial aortic valve replacement, provided certain precautions are taken to avoid reoperation for nonsignificant aortic regurgitation.
