How do I fix this? A: In parse, when the regular expression finds an IMAGE_URL, you need to return a regular expression. The existing code returns a string. function parse(src) { var re = /\w{2,}/; if (re.test(src)) { return " "; } else { return src; } } The global object is globals, a collection of properties. Most of the properties are the JavaScript functions and their available properties. The two properties you are specifically interested in are parse and srcElement. parse The parse method is the one called when the page is loaded and you are not specifically calling it again. If you are getting the image URL from another page, you will have to return that other page's URL and you need to remove the src attribute from it. srcElement This is the default source that is returned when you don't specify the src attribute for an element. It is not useful for trying to return an image. If you specify an image source, you need to return that image source. As far as I can tell, there isn't a way to use the global properties to return the image source for the current page being parsed without passing the image URL from the source (unless I'm missing something). If you cannot extract the image URL from the current page, you need to use a DOM parser. One of my favorites is jQuery.
