Internet is full of products and services that can be used for great personal benefit, or for profit. The issues of commercialism and product integrity are not limited to the "older" technologies such as television, radio, and movies. The use of computers has also created a new generation of unethical conduct. In high school, students learn how to protect themselves from such abuses and guide their peers. During college, some learn to control their impulses and protect themselves, but many do not. In this course, you will be guided through ethical issues raised by the use of computers on the Internet. You will explore the issues from two perspectives: those of the Internet user and those of a publisher or distributor. You will analyze the ethical concerns of these users and examine their responses and behaviors. You will examine the issues of integrity, commercialism, and privacy, and you will examine how each impacts on Internet use. You will study relevant legal issues and how they impact on ethical behavior. You will learn to be critical in examining issues raised by commercialism. You will identify and confront the competitive pressures that are driving the rapid growth of the Internet. You will explore the issue of privacy. You will also explore issues of honesty and integrity in the conduct of Internet businesses, and the value of online publications for information dissemination. Focused on: Managing Information Explore: Ethics Beyond High School: Academic Ethics and Internet Use is intended for college/university students and adults. Ethics Beyond High School - Business Ethics and Internet Use Description: This module provides students with a comprehensive and authoritative overview of the many issues related to commercial use of the Internet and the Internet's potential as a business tool.
