Canopus Edius 6 Crack RarThe mayor of Seattle made a career of paying off his debts. So far, he has saved taxpayers $1 million. But critics are calling for him to repay up to $50,000 of the money he cashed in to fund his personal affairs, such as insider stock trading and purchase of a high-end vacation home in Arizona. Some of Mayor Richard D. Edgerton's closest friends, such as his longtime economic development director, did not try to hide their efforts to help the mayor, even once his legal problems started to mount. Edgerton's friends included some of Seattle's most powerful people — investment bankers, lawyers and a man who helped his family build the $20 million mansion where Edgerton and his wife now live with their four young children. A “personal character affidavit” from one of his closest friends even listed his occupation as “philanthropist.” He left government on Friday, the day he was sentenced in federal court in Phoenix to two years of probation for arranging to buy several hundred shares of Bank One stock for $55,000 in November 2001, when the shares were worth only about $27,000. In November 2004, Edgerton arranged to sell the same shares to a company controlled by friends for about $200,000. Edgerton, 41, pleaded guilty to securities fraud and a judge said he must pay $60,000 in restitution to the Bank One Corp. and its shareholders, and another $1,000 in fine and $1,500 in costs.
