(5) it's pretty good, but also a bit expensive... :/ I used this package for a whole year and it's great, just fone the publisher about their prices and compare with your needs and you'll find that it's a very good package and I would recommend it! I'm using it since two years, it's like a self-animating life-giver, I would recommend it to everybody who wish to have a pure taste of animation and choose not to use the crappy cursors of Windows. I was looking for a package like this since many years and there is finally a place to find what I wanted. I paid 4.99 euros and it has awesome cursors with sound and music. I like it. Nice cursors, at least compared to the default ones. But is not a free version. Overall I think the package was a decent package and the editor was well written but it just wasn't free. ## What's New in the Large Pointers 2?

The latest stable release of GeoHot's Silverlight Toolkit brings some new features such as Image Processing, Render to Texture, etc. Included are 8 PNGs images for the textures including a 32x32 one. The main change I made is in the rendering code. GeoHot ported several C# classes to Silverlight but he did not port the rendering. The GPU scheduler in Silverlight is more advanced, and the API is more powerful. The next release of the Silverlight Toolkit will include more features, and I am planning to work on more types of rasterization. How about flying 3D scenes with rasterization? Finally in the Toolkit, I found that I couldn't include a 32x32, so I had to come up with a 32x32 PNG. But now we have that and it's just 1,100 bytes and that's before compression. If you need help or want to update the source code or website, or just want to play with it. Drop us a message here: Updated [2/13/2012] - Added 32x32 textures because I really liked the aesthetics of that, especially on the Toolkit site. Added a big banner to the site, and the toolbar is now at the top instead of the bottom. Added 48x48 textures for the toolbar, the buttons and the background, but I'm working on another 32x32 for the buttons and the background. I might add one if I feel like it. Update [2/11/2012] - Based on thoughts of commenters, I placed the buttons at the bottom and added a shadow. Textures are the same as before.
