Today's prices are only real the morning of the Anaesthetic management of a 69-year-old woman with aortic stenosis and reduced right ventricular function. Aortic stenosis is an increasingly common disease that presents a therapeutic dilemma. Patients with aortic stenosis who are symptomatic are managed medically and those who are not usually require valve replacement. The surgical procedure of choice is aortic valve replacement with the left ventricular function being the primary determinant of outcome. The authors report the anaesthetic management of a 69-year-old woman with aortic stenosis who
